Christianity and Japan

During the last few days a convention of divisity students of the Episcopal Church has been in session in N. w York for the purpose of stimulating the missionary spirit of that communion. Among the subjects discussed was "The Future of the Church in Japan." Japan is not a promising field for the sort of missionary effort which these zealous young men would encourage, In 1887, as the result of nineteen years' "work," there were only 18,000 adult Pro-testant Christians of all sects out of a population of 35,000,000. The Japanese raiuse to take a serious view of Christianity, and a great part of them are of the same disposi-tion toward them own religion. Talk to an educated man, and he will frankly tell you that the Buddhist mythology is only a series of old wives' tales to him, and that all intelligent Japanese believe only in one First Cause. Press him still further, and his ideas of religion differ little from pure agnosticism. Dogma and doctrine do not commend themselves to his reasoning faculties. The spirit of religious judifference among the Japanese was manifested in a rather amusing way at a recent conference as to the advisability of adopting a new national religion. Mr. Fukuzawa, a well known writer, was in favor of taking Coristianity, "not because it is true, but because it is the creed of the most highly civilized nations, and Japan should wear the same dress as her neighbors with whom she desires to stand well." Professor Toyama advocated christianity "to improve music, and unite sentiment and feeling in harmonious coopera-tion." Mr. Kato, president of the Universi-ty of Tokio, was of the opinion "that reli-giou is not needed for the educated," though he urged "religious teaching in the schools because there is a serious lack of moral sen-timent among the masses." But Mr. Sa-guira contended that it would be useless to devise or embrace any new religion, because "the Japanese have no taste for religion and can never become a religious peo-

The circumstance that many of the old Buddhist temples of the country are falling into decay would seem to justify Mr. Sagui-ra's remark. But Lord Eustace Cecil adduces one striking proof that, after all, religious faith still exists as a vital influence among great numbers of the people. Ten years ago the imposing Buddhist temple of the Howgwanji sect at Kioto was burnt down, and now it is rebuilding on a scale of magnificence never before seen in Japan. Yet the $5,500,000 obtained for its construction since the fire was collected not from the rich, because as a class they do not exist, but from the very poorest of the people, who live in mud huts hardly so good as Irish cabins, and feed upon millet and rice. When he inquired as to "some fifty ropes of thick, black glossy material, each as many feet in length, and as big round as a pair of stout fists could grasp," which bung from one of the beams supporting the walls of the new building, he was informed that they were made entirely of human hair. "They were the offerings of the women of Japan who, too poor to contribute money, had cut off their black tresses as a fit sacrifice toward so holy an object;" and the quantity of hair showed that these woman must have num-bered hundreds of thousands. "After such a demonstration," as Lord Eustace says, "the existence of faith in Japan, if only the right cord was touched, needed no demon-But, so far, the Christian misstration." sionaries have not touched that chord. When the Japanese lose their old faith they do not adopt a new, but pass into the religi-ous indifference displayed at the conference spoken of. Yet Lord Eastace finds it "difficult to speak too highly of their present transitory condition." "It is marked not only by uniform courtesy, but by good behavior. Neither swearing nor bad language is to be heard on the streets, nor is drunkenness or immorality to be seen unless sought for. Everywhere civilty and politeness seemed to be the rule among all classes, not only toward one another, but invariably and especially toward strangers. Thanks to a good police and the natural amiability of the people, crimes of violence and outrage are scarcely known." It appears, then, that even if they do not adopt Christianity as their formal religion, the Japaness are practising and displaying its virtues .- N. Y. Sun.
